

Citing the work of a prior team: In this course, our first priority is your learning. Congruent with that, when you are working on a design project that has been worked on before, you are allowed access to the prior report even if it is password protected. Most ideas in reports from prior design teams have already been publicly disclosed (at the end of semester poster session). However, this is not always the case. For example, if a team writes about an idea in their report but does not present it at the poster session, this idea should be treated as confidential. You are encouraged to contact members of a prior team if you have questions. Always be professional and respectful in your interactions with your peers and our design team alumni.

Acknowledging sources: It is critical to acknowledge the sources of your ideas in all written and oral communications. If you take a figure from the web, journal article or prior design team report, post the source on the slide or in the figure caption (in a poster or report). If you take an idea from the web, a journal article or a prior design team report, this is even more important to clearly acknowledge.
